

ALL IN THE FAMILY

Dan frowned at the memo.

Dan frowned at the memo from Jane, his manager. 'OK, this really was awkward', he thought. Last week he'd been asked to collect quotes from local contractors and present a shortlist with his recommendation for the job. Now, Jane had returned the shortlist, rejecting Dan's recommendation.

All right, it wasn't the cheapest quote he had recommended - but the one with the most value for money. The contractor he'd highlighted was the best one for the job, offering extra benefits at an overall lower rate than the others. But this wasn't what was bothering Dan. The trouble was that he now knew that Jane's choice was a company owned and operated by her brother-in-law.

'What am I going to do now?' he sighed.
